Step 3

Paying Tuition Fees

This Letter of Acceptance can be used to obtain Study Permit (Visa). However, you have to pay your total fee upon arrival to Canada before starting your program of choice.

Applying for Study Permit (Visa)

Once you received the official Letter of Acceptance, you have to apply for Study Permit (Visa).

Persons who are outside Canada who are not Canadian citizens or Permanent Residents of Canada and who wish to study temporarily in Canada are required to obtain a study permit. A study permit is issued if the application is accepted.

Study Permit (Visa) are not issued from within Canada. You must apply to Citizenship and Immigration Canada (CIC) which is located in your nearest Canadian Embassy, High Commission or Consulate. CIC is a Canadian government department, and operates independent of any Canadian educational institution. Official information on requirements should be obtained from a CIC office in Canada, a Canadian Embassy or consulate overseas and/or on the CIC website at <http://www.cic.gc.ca>

APPENDIX A

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT VISA ISSUANCE

What is the visa interview like?

There are many different methods of applying for a Canadian visa. In some countries, you can drop your visa application and materials in a drop-box. In others, it is possible to mail in the application. In many countries, an interview is required.

The Canadian consul who interviews you is required to determine that your documents are genuine, that you intend to enrol as a full-time student, that you have enough money to support yourself and will not need to use the Canadian social welfare system, and that you intend to return home after you finish your studies.

The consul may ask a variety of questions, such as:

- Where are you going to study?
- What are you going to study?
- How will you use that degree in your home country?
- Is this the first time you are applying for a student visa?
- Have you ever traveled to Canada before? If yes, what did you do there?
- Do you plan to remain in Canada after your studies?
- What qualifies you for the studies you are going to undertake?
- Does your family (or other financial sponsor) really have enough money to support you?
Are any members of your family currently living in Canada? If yes, what are they doing there?
- If you are married, is your spouse going to travel with you? What about your children, if you have children?
- When do you plan to finish your studies?
- What will be your first destination in Canada?

The consul who interviews you may be overworked and tired, and probably has many people to interview besides you, so the consul may or may not be friendly, and may or may not ask you several questions. It is important to convey a positive personal impression when you interview with the consul, so that the consul doesn't deny the visa to you for "personal" reasons. Conveying a "positive impression" means such things as:

- Be clean and neat in your appearance.
- Look at the consul when talking with him or her.
- Answer questions directly and honestly.
- Certainly, do not make any untrue statements.
- Answer only the questions asked.
- Smile.

You might say:

I. I'm nervous about applying for a visa. What are the reasons that visas are denied?

The two main reasons visas are denied are:

- (1) inadequate financial support and
- (2) failure to prove “non-immigrant intent.”

(1) If the consul believes you do not have enough money to be a full-time student, the consul will not issue you a visa. It is important to take proof of your ability to pay for your tuition, fees, living expenses, books, and health insurance. Usually a bank statement or a letter from your department (if you have a graduate assistantship) will be sufficient.

(2) Proving “non-immigrant intent” means that you need to be prepared to convince the consul, if s/he asks you, that you intend to return to your home country after you finish your studies in Canada.

The law requires a consul to deny a student visa to anyone the consul believes intends to remain in Canada permanently.

You will be in a good position to prove “non-immigrant intent” if you have a job in your country you will return to, or if there is a good chance you can get a job in your country with the degree you will receive from our College, or if you have close family members there (parents, spouse, children), or if you own property there.

II. What if my visa is denied?

Ask the consul to give you a written explanation for the denial. Contact our Admissions Office immediately to explain what happened and mail us the written denial. Give us the date and place of the denial and, if possible, the name of the consular officer who issued it.

Sometimes, if it is clear there has been a simple misunderstanding, or if your documents were not acceptable to the consul, we can provide the additional information needed to help you get the visa.

Sometimes, though, our Admissions Office can do nothing to help. The law concerning student visas gives consular officers very wide latitude, so their decisions can seem arbitrary.
